Pastors John and Averter Gray are back, preaching and ministering to those in need of hope and grace, strength and healing. As they come to terms with their own struggles related to trust, marriage, and John's health, we see that their trials may also be the source of their wisdom. As they continue to work for one of the largest churches in America, they are also wrapping up their life in Houston and preparing to follow John's new calling to take over as the lead pastor at a church in Greenville, South Carolina. As John tries to deal with the pressure to build a new team quickly, Averter deals with the anxiety of having to move her family yet again, and even greater fears about whether or not she is ready to take on the role of first lady. Whether John and Averter are dealing with problems in their own lives or assisting members of the Houston and Greenville communities, both John and Averter share God's teachings and reveal the complexities of their personal journey like no one else -- with courage, commitment, and a much-needed sense of humor.
